HOOSIER'S BACKFIRE UPON DRYS SPREADS

Hull Fights to Oust Anti-Saloon League From Political Control.

IDEA PLEASES MURPHY

Winner of Seat in Congress Says That Prohibitionists "Shackle" Government.

HITS CLASS DICTATION

Former Distiller Elected Despite Speeches of Bryan and Wheeler.

Special Dispatch to THE NEW YORK HERALD. FRENCH LICK SPRINGS, Ind., Nov. 20.—The fight begun by W. E. Hull, Representative-elect from the sixteenth district of Indiana, against the Anti-Saloon League as a menace to good government and as a dangerous institution which must be driven out of politics, has held the attention of the Tammany leaders here for two days.

Mr. Hull appears to have the newest idea growing out of the prohibition fight. He has started a backfire against the league which is catching hold in many sections in the Middle West and is causing dry agitators much worry.

Charles F. Murphy to-day heard all about Mr. Hull's remarkable campaign, and gave his blessing to the Republican from Indiana.

"You have the right idea. We don't seem to get getting anywhere the way we are headed," Mr. Murphy told Mr. Hull.

Says League Elects Weaklings.

The Hull idea has made such a hit with the New York men that they will carry it back with them, and in all probability adopt it in their Albany fights with Anderson and the league.

"The Anti-Saloon League has outlived its usefulness and must go," Mr. Hull contends. He made that his fight in what was supposed to be a dry district and won by 5,000 votes.

"Under the guise of fighting for a moral cause," he said, "the league is tunneling under Federal and State Governments. Its support of any man, whether capable or not, as long as he is honest, is getting weak men into office and keeping good men out."

The Federal Administration must "shake off the shackles" and assert its independence of the league or that Administration is sure to be dragged down, Mr. Hull said.

The league, he added, actually controls the prohibition enforcement bureau and has usurped the powers of the Internal Revenue Department, yet prohibition enforcement is a failure. Conditions are worse in many respects than before the eighteenth amendment was adopted, he asserted.

The Government is losing tremendous sums, which are going into the pockets of medicine and other manufacturers because of the unfair and repealed laws put on the books by the league, freeing certain denatured products from Federal tax, Mr. Hull contends. There is no

Blames Motor Crashes on Moonshine Whisky

Special Dispatch to THE NEW YORK HERALD. PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 20.—Moonshine whisky was blamed for many automobile accidents by Dr. Charles E. Bricker, police surgeon of this city, in an address at the convention of municipal doctors of cities with populations of 100,000 or more. Dr. Bricker said many accidents and traffic violations were due directly to the drivers of automobiles having taken moonshine.

"This whisky contains fusel oil, which distorts the vision of the driver," Dr. Bricker said. "It makes him pass traffic signals, for instance, because they believe them to be further away than they really are. The same amount of pure whisky would hardly affect them at all."

logical reason in the system of exemptions, he insists, and if those products paid a just tax there would be actual relief from unnecessary taxes.

When he goes to Washington next March Mr. Hull will be armed with masses of statistics and will then begin his real fight. He does not seek to be the leader of the wet cause, but his line of attack probably will soon attract national attention. He said to-day:

"Merely agitating the beer and light wine question is not getting at the fundamentals of the prohibition problem. We have got to get a broader view of the whole thing. The law as it stands either will become a dead letter blue law or the Government will be obliged to control the situation in quite a different manner than is now being done."

"In a democracy we cannot have class dictation in any form. No group, whether wet or dry agitators, can control the Government and have that Government retain self-respect and the respect of all the people. Prohibition as now operated is class dictation. We must not become a nation of bootleggers and lawbreakers."

"If the wealthy man is allowed to purchase whisky in violation of the law, then his chauffeur quite naturally thinks he has a right to violate other laws."

When Hull became a candidate at the request of 15,000 voters the Anti-Saloon League turned loose its big batteries in his direction. Wayne Wheeler headed the fight. William J. Bryan in eight speeches in that district said: "This man Hull is no hiring of the liquor interest; he is the heir apparent to the House of Barleycorn."

Won by Record Vote.

William G. McAfee made four speeches in the district. Hull won by a record vote. His issue was that the league must not become the Government or the Government would fail. He carried every county in the district.

Hull is wealthy. He was in the distilling business for thirty years, starting as a Government guesser and then became general manager of Clarke Brothers, the largest distillers in the world. He never drinks or smokes and has no sympathy with intemperance of the saloon brand. He has been a Republican leader in the Peoria district for twenty years.

The easiness with which the Tammany men have endorsed Hull's positions further indicates that the prohibition question is becoming rapidly non-partisan. The wet leaders through the middle West are as eager as Tammany to get together regardless of politics and fight along the same line.

SLAYER OF SON MUST DIE.

Special Dispatch to THE NEW YORK HERALD. TRENTON, Nov. 20.—The Court of Errors and Appeals, with one dissenting vote, affirmed the conviction of Martin Ehlers, Jr., who is under sentence of death for killing his seven-year-old son last April 22 at Woodridge, N. J. He also killed his wife, but was tried only on the indictment charging the murder of his son. The court held that it is not essential to prove motive for a conviction of murder in the first degree.

POLICE LIQUOR TRIAL FOR 2 HIGH OFFICERS

Inspector Walsh and Capt. Rohrig Accused After $7,000 Raid on Boat.

NEGLIGENCE CHARGED

Men Said to Have Failed to Watch for Smugglers at Sheepshead Bay.

FIRST CASES OF KIND

Commissioner Leach to Hear Pleas of Subordinates in Brooklyn Headquarters.

High police officers will be tried tomorrow for the first time on charges of failing to enforce the State prohibition laws when Inspector Thomas F. Walsh of the Ninth Inspection District and Capt. Frank J. Rohrig of the Brooklyn avenue station in Brooklyn go before John A. Leach, Deputy Commissioner, at Brooklyn Police Headquarters.

Capt. Rohrig was suspended by Commissioner Leach on November 6, but it was not known until last night that charges also had been preferred against Inspector Walsh.

The charges against both men are the result of a raid by detectives under John Daly, Deputy Commissioner, on November 5 at Gerritsen Beach near Sheepshead Bay. They seized liquor valued at $7,000 aboard the schooner Marguerite.

It was said at the office of Commissioner Daly that the police knew that smuggling was going on and that Capt. Rohrig had been instructed to watch the vicinity of the beach. When the detectives under Commissioner Daly went there no policemen were on duty and no guard was in sight.

Capt. Rohrig was suspended the next day, the Commissioner alleging that he had failed to obey orders and that he had not taken sufficient precaution to guard the beach against smugglers and had failed to enforce the State laws. Nothing was said at that time about Inspector Walsh, the charges against him apparently being the result of later investigations.

Inspector Walsh became a captain on October 23, 1918, and was made acting inspector of the old Eighth district on October 19, 1921. Later he was transferred to the Ninth district in Brooklyn, which includes Brownsville. During his term in Manhattan he helped in the investigation of the Elwell murder case. Capt. Rohrig has been a captain for ten years.

ANTI-VOLSTEAD JURY TO TRY CASSESE FOR RUM RUNNING

All Talesmen Selected Admit Opposition to Dry Act and When One Confesses He Favors Prohibition, the Defense Excuses Him.

Every member of the jury which was selected yesterday in the United States District Court in Brooklyn to try Anthony Casseese, a tobacco merchant charged with bootlegging, expressed the opinion that the Volstead act was "too drastic" or he was opposed to it for some other reason. They declared, however, that their opinions regarding prohibition enforcement would not prevent them from trying the case fairly.

Twenty-five talesmen were called before the jury box was filled. Most of the rejecting was done by George Gordon Battle, counsel for the defendant. One of the talesmen said he was "certainly opposed to prohibition," and was ruled out by Assistant United States Attorney Blue. Mr. Battle excused a talesman who said he favored prohibition. Court was adjourned soon after the jury had been completed, and at his own request Casseese was taken back to the Raymond street jail by a rear exit.

By so doing Casseese escaped service of papers in the $20,000 alienation suit begun by Milton Hirsch, husband of Mrs. Edith Stevens, the young woman who is said to have accompanied Casseese on his bootlegging trips to the Bahamas and who is being held as a material witness in the case. Hirsch waited for a summons on the Johnson street side of the Federal Building, but Casseese went out with deputy marshals by way of a machine shop in Adams street. Hirsch said he would be back to-day and hoped for better luck.

Capt. Charles Oman was the most important witness called at yesterday's session of the trial. He said that he had been hired for a trip South by the tobacco merchant, and told of Mrs. Stevens and Casseese checking 1,500 parcels, each wrapped in burlap, taken aboard from another schooner off Nassau. He said that he brought Casseese's ship safely to Long Island Sound, having previously been directed to telephone Casseese's home after arrival in American waters. He did so, he said, and was directed to proceed to Bayville, which he reached in March.

When the boat docked, he said, Casseese appeared with trunks to remove the cargo, but State Troopers appeared and arrested everybody. Another witness was John F. Latimer, who testified that he was hired by Casseese as chief officer. He thought it was a pleasure yacht, he said, until one of the parcels wrapped in burlap broke. It contained whisky, he said.

LIQUOR CAN BUY FAVORS NOW, SAYS HIRSHFIELD
Commissioner Ends Inquiry Into Civil Service Graft.

David Hirschfield, Commissioner of Accounts, yesterday ended his investigation of the alleged civil service graft charged by Patrick J. Ryan, former fingerprint expert of the Municipal Civil Service Commission. Mr. Hirschfield said he might take it up again later, but for the present he has evidence to complete the case against eighteen policemen charged with trying to buy promotion for $1,500 each. He has turned over his findings to the commission and to the Police Department.

Abraham Kaplan, president of the commission, who is also making an investigation, said he would proceed with his inquiry to-day and rush it through. The commission has two objects in view: to decide the merits of Ryan's claim for reinstatement, and to investigate more fully the charges of Ryan and Michael J. Burke regarding graft.

Referring to charges that Burke, a former bartender, brought whisky to the commission's office in the Municipal Building in order to impress his friends with his intimacy with the commissioners Hirschfield said:

"Volstead has made many changes in the makeup of human beings. It may be possible that Burke was open handed and free and that some of the people in the commission's office were less cautious than they would have been in pre-Volstead days. A bottle of whisky can turn the trick where money or influence fails."

LIQUOR CASE THROWN OUT.

A charge of grand larceny made against Clifford McAllister, 43, an investment broker, of 8 West Fifth street, by Hyman Goodstein, a broker, of 745 Seventh avenue, who alleged that the defendant had obtained $5,000 from him on a whisky deal, was dismissed by Magistrate Levine in Yorkville Court yesterday. It said the case was one for the civil courts.
